FEZANA Workshop: Empowering Women at the United Nations

By Nurelle Mehta, Toronto

[Nurelle Mehta participated for the first time at the 58th Session of the Commission on the Status of Women at the United Nations on March 10, 2014 as a member of the FEZANA UN-NGO Team.]

I can safely say that the Big Apple has a world of opportunities, only if one is willing to actually look for them.

After several conference calls from November to March, and countless edited versions of our presentation, we were finally ready to represent FEZANA at the United Nations (UN) for the Commission of a Status of Women 58 (CSW) conference. Going in and coming out, my entire perspective on my goals, ambitions and life in general have taken a total 180.

I vividly remember my first day walking into the UN building filled with a sense of pride in our Zoroastrian delegation to the UN. I felt confident yet uneasy because I was unsure of what this week could bring. I knew it could go either way -- good or bad -- but I hoped for the best and channeled my vision in the right direction. Our practice sessions were mainly over phone calls and I wasn't at a 100% but the feeling of just being in New York City made it a lot better!

The second day rolled around and I felt more comfortable especially because you were exposed to huge crowds of people -- new and in the same boat as you. These crowds were different. They were from all walks of the earth, different accents, different appearances and different cultures. Canada is known to be a cultural mosaic but this... this was incomparable. It was a fusion of inspiration and culture under one roof! The day of the presentation flew by and I can hardly recall it. It was just in a blink of an eye that it all fell together. The audience was left satisfied, and receiving good feedback was what really motivated me to become better.

Right after the presentation, a few of us decided to attend a round table conference on trafficking and migration. I volunteered to write notes for our group on a huge chart paper but little did I know that the person in charge of writing was also meant to speak in front of the whole room. I don't mind speaking to an audience or going up on stage but I knew that I wasn't the type of person to speak on the spot without preparation. I was really nervous but I said a quick Ashem Vohu and Yatha Ahu Vairyo and I was good to go. I then realized that maybe this opportunity was just a blessing in disguise and well. I was right - it was a blessing. After presenting in front of the huge crowd, many people seemed to be impressed with my delivery. I don't mean to boast in any way but I had just discovered a new talent: Speaking on the spot. It is something a political science student needs especially in higher years of postsecondary education. I was no longer afraid to be on the spot and have come to a realization that I can use this to my advantage. With the right people, right connections and current knowledge from my courses at university and gained knowledge from the CSW meetings, I can see myself moving forward. I am confident in my dreams of working at the UN and making an impact on people's lives.

By the last day, I had grown a strong attachment to the city and the UN building. It was like I had created a niche for myself. Reflecting back, I am so grateful for this opportunity and would encourage others to get involved and grab it.

To conclude, I'd like to repeat what I said earlier: opportunities are always available. When one goes on a search for them, you come to find that every day is an opportunity within itself just hiding for you to seek it. So, if there is anything I'd like to tell people, it's to keep believing in yourself and don't shy away from the world when the world is opening up to you.

Lastly, I would also like to give a huge thanks to Teenaz Javat who informed me about this wonderful opportunity and Afreed Mistry, Mani Rao, Homi Gandhi, Behram Pastakia, Nina Mistry, Tanya Bharda and Rayomond Dinshaw because they are really what brought such a wonderful presentation to life and, without all of their hard work and contribution, I don't think the CSW 58 meeting would have been such a great success. □

To Connect:

Zarathushtis from anywhere in the world interested in joining the FEZANA UN-NGO team should contact Co-Chairs, Afreed B. Mistry afreed.mistry\(\)gmail.com, Behram Pastakia bpastakia \(\) aol.com, and Homi D. Gandhi homidgandhi \(\) gmail.com, with a copy of their curriculum vitae and a letter of intent stating how they would further the vision and mission of the UN. We seek individuals with leadership potential who can speak and write well. Fluency in multiple languages is an added asset.

Gram Seva Trust Update

[The Gram Seva service example was part of the presentation of the FEZANA Workshop on Empowering Women, at the 58th Session of the Commission on the Status of Women at the United Nations held in March 2014. Below are excerpts from an update from Dr Ashwin Shah who writes from Village Kharel, Navsari District in rural Gujarat in India.]

This year, Gram Seva celebrates 20 years of health care delivery and rural development. More than 8,000 children have received treatment for malnutrition and more than 25,000 pregnant women have received antenatal care. In addition to these cumulative milestones, Gram Seva also treats over 70,000 patients annually in our hospital.

Gram Seva has always been a proponent of a holistic approach to healthcare and has taken our community health workers advice to heart. We have started off this year with initiatives in sectors outside of the hospital such as rehabilitation programs for alcoholics and sanitation projects for poor families. As we continue this work, you can look forward to hearing about our many more projects that are improving our surrounding communities.

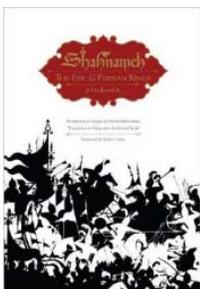

Thank you,
Dr. Ashwin Shah

BOOK AWARENESS

This month we focus on two Zoroastrian books that were mentioned in the news:

The Shahnameh: The Epics of the Persian Kings
by Rahmanian

A stunningly vivid colorful and intricately illustrated 500-page book edited and translated by Sadri. It was featured in the Wall Street Journal and is available at FIRES (ZAH & ZANT) and at amazon.com.

A recent excavation in China claims 'very likely' to redefine the origin of Zoroastrianism. You can delve into this Zoroastrian-China connection in "China Archaeology and Art Digest - Zoroastrianism in China" Vol. 4 No 1. The journal is also available at FIRES (ZAH).
